On a budget, I found the best place to start is to have a look at some of the plugins available from the web. I really like the 'CAD' plugin in the hope that it can be used to import files from the native CADD format - that's what I'm used to. I think it's a shame that Autodesk didn't choose to have both the native CADD format and the plugin for compatibility reasons, or am I just being naive? Hi, Hi Sven I agree, now that the Adobe revamp of their cad products has been completed, Autodesk should really have come up with their own solution to this. They had the whole industry banging on the door with the same request, and there's been plenty of time for them to do it. The export from their native format (DWG) to the external (CAD) format is very poor. I think that this whole situation is a mess.
