A fold on the upper eyelid often referred to as epicanthus is present in 0-87% of the population. It is usually small, shallow and located on the margin of the upper eyelid with no distinct fold between the lid margin and the upper lid. However, when the fold is long, wide and sharp, it can be described as epicanthal fold. The aim of this study is to investigate the characteristics of the epicanthal fold and to determine whether there is a correlation between clinical characteristics and ultrasound findings. Nineteen patients were included. Age, gender, duration of disease, upper eyelid margin distance, upper eyelid margin distance to lower eyelid margin, presence of lower eyelid laxity, and degree of lower eyelid laxity were noted. Distance between the anterior margin of the upper eyelid and the anterior margin of the inferior orbital rim (AUC), distance between the anterior margin of the upper eyelid and the inferior border of the cartilage of the septum of the nose (AUL), ratio of the length of the epicanthal fold to the length of the inferior margin of the upper eyelid (LRC), length of the epicanthal fold (L), and width of the epicanthal fold (W) were measured on ultrasound. The mean age of the patients was 35.05 ± 16.1 years (median: 32 years; range: 2-65 years). The AUC, AUL, LRC, L, and W
