the ObjectARX libraries are available in the ObjectARX Server. They can be accessed through Autodesk Exchange for your organization's developers. History AutoCAD was originally developed and named DSC by The Design Studio Corporation in 1981 and then by Micrografx in 1983. DSC was developed by a team led by Dan Saffer who founded Micrografx. This software was then developed and marketed by Micrografx, and later owned by Autodesk, which still owns DSC. DSC was launched in 1982, and was soon very popular. DSC was the first application that combined a general purpose CAD program with a DTA (Design Technical Assistant) for technical designers and AutoCAD (1987) was developed to allow more engineering applications. The current release of DSC, AutoCAD 2011, is the 3rd major version of AutoCAD. Micrografx later released an application named DWG which was bundled with DSC and AutoCAD. DWG, a workgroup collaboration tool, was a stand-alone application that was included with a new purchase of AutoCAD. Later, when Micrografx changed their name to Autodesk, they released other stand-alone applications such as Fireworks (1989) and 3D Studio (1990). Autodesk discontinued DSC and DWG in 2006. Due to the widespread success of AutoCAD, Micrografx and Autodesk continued to develop AutoCAD and Micrografx and Autodesk have partnered since 1983. In 1991 Autodesk bought Micrografx and its line of products was absorbed into AutoCAD. In 1994, Autodesk opened a development centre in Los Angeles, California, with offices in San Francisco, California, and Mountain View, California. Autodesk moved its development offices to San Rafael, California, in 1997. In 2003, Autodesk acquired ObjectARX. In September 2006 Autodesk announced a merger with UGS, Inc., of Davenport, Iowa. As a result of the merger UGS became known as Autodesk UGS. The group's leader, Joey Gibson, has previously said that Jews have a "special place in hell" and that "they were the original animal abusers", according to The Guardian. In response to the protest, the Consulate in Munich has apologised for "any offence" and has said that the sign was removed within 20 minutes of its being spotted. "We regret any offence caused by the posting of a sign in the garden of the American Consulate.
