Learn About European Aviation Safety Agency (EASA) is responsible for the oversight of all airlines flying in European Union (EU) airspace. [...] The A320 has the capability to be used to teach or to demonstrate the systems and functions of the aircraft. However, to be able to teach and demonstrate the functions correctly it is necessary to use the Instructor Pilot (IP) for the instructor and the class members for the students. To obtain correct knowledge it is also necessary to check the functions as they are applied to the aircraft's systems. For this purpose, each classroom use case will have a link to the avionics and systems manual where it should be possible to find the function description of the features used in the teaching session. Documentation that is available must be used. It is very important that only the correct procedures are used. The procedures should be checked first for their accuracy and then also for their applicability to the A320 Family of aircraft. Documents that are not owned by Airbus (or CASA) must be adapted to the requirements of the aircraft. If the document is also marked with AV (Aircraft Variant) information, then
