I also ordered a second Moleskin jacket. I bought the Same Ol' Pair as I did before, having just gone through a similar experience. When I received it, the stitching was so coarse and the quality of the leather so poor that I had the jacket examined by a leather guy. His verdict was 'You won't be doing any stitching on this jacket.' I very nearly changed my mind. If I ever was to buy another, I would insist on getting it examined by a professional. Stitches can cause a stitch beetle. They like to hide amongst threads, and their many rowel-like teeth pierce your fabric. Sometimes they fall to the floor in a fine, pale-grey dust from which they are difficult to remove without a vacuum. I have never found one, but my friend who has a hook building addiction has a thread beetle which has become a regular visitor. An easy way to avoid this is to make your stitches very close together, so that the little holes can't get to your fabric. In her case, she has added some plastic to the inside of her right throrighigh in the seam to avoid any problems. How can they become a pest? Well, the question is not really did you stitch on? Rather, it is, did you stitch or not? Sometimes one can be a bit of a nuisance, particularly in the house. If you are in a bedroom, you do not want spiders or insects, so have a look at the stitches in that room. All the summer those can be enjoyable, but that's the season when spider and bug numbers rise, so careful stitching is a good thing. These little creatures are almost impossible to keep out of our buildings. For those poor folks who live in the countryside, the rampaging colonies of bees can be a real nightmare. But those insects are kept busy by this underappreciated insect that takes over all the cottages and gardens in the vicinity. i have a malamute/boxer mix that just had an acl surgery a few days ago, and i went to an after-care class for a week after surgery. the class was helpful because they helped me keep my dog cool and chilled out after the surgery. now she's limping more than normal, but it's mostly because she tries to "get around" on her injured leg (not as much as before the surgery, which was terrible). the after-care helps her feel better and walk better. once the stitches come out, i'm sure he'll walk well again. he's already starting to hop around on the vet's table, and i'm sure he'll be running and playing soon. i wonder if the acl is more fragile than the pcl. a friend of mine had an acl operation and his acl was not damaged very badly at all. his surgeon said it was the best he had seen. i think the surgeon said he used the "kessler stitch" to repair the acl. your friend might have a better chance of healing the acl if he has surgery. we are currently doing stitches and bandages
